Newspaper Abuse.

It is a fact not generally understood that abuse of a man in public print actually makes for him friends. If a candidate for office, the reckless dependiation of an opposition party organ is usually a strong card in his favor. The public is quick to discern between calm, dispassionate criticism, and vituperative abuse; and though be true, the public is usually loth to believe them, and is rather disposed to regard them in the light of persecution, and to rally to the standard of the accused.

As a case in point, take that of Henry Edgerin the black catalogue that he was not accused of through the columns of the Sucramento Record. either one of which recusations, if true, ought to have condemced him in the estimation of the people; and yet they expressed their opinion of his accusers, and their confidence in him, by electing him to the State Senate by a majority of eight hundred votes.

This case ought to teach journalists, whose weapons of warfare in a political campaign are personal abuse and vituperation, that they are but aiding the cause they would oppose, and that such treatment of an opponent is as lutile for barm as it is unmanly.

Abuse is a kind of argument that my blackguard can make use of without harm to any one Street, one door from Kanhumans street. but himself.
